

Motivation

Consider This:

It's likely that an athlete who's as superb as LeBron James never really learned the concept and application of team and team sports: the interdependence of it all. Throughout his career as an athlete (with one exception: the careful tutelage of Mike Krewzewski as coach of Team USA), he's been not the main, but the sole attraction, capable of carrying other lesser athletes along with him to success. His capabilities fell short in the NBA Finals series against Dallas, which performed as a team. He depended on no one, and cannot learn how dependence in team endeavors is essential. A cohesive, high-performing team will always win over a collection of individuals, super-stars or super-super-stars.